In a world where money holds all the power, will yet another wealthy politician take his dark secrets to the grave?

Claire's world turns upside down when she hears her three-year-old daughter Lizzie singing "Itsy Bitsy Spider," the nursery rhyme song that will haunt Claire the rest of her life.

Claire's step-father, the wealthy, well-respected Boston Mayor Jack McCallin, watches Claire's every move, threatening her never to tell "the secret."

Claire needs to protect her daughter, but has no idea who to turn to as McCallin has friends in high places. Plus, people have been known to disappear if they buck the mayor.

When Claire confides in Boston Globe reporter Matt Christenson who helps Claire and Lizzie escape the mayor's Belmont mansion, the two set out to find someone who will corroborate what Claire wants the public to know. After all, who will believe the spoiled step-daughter of a wealthy politician?

But with the the mayor's entourage close behind, leaving a trail of murders behind Claire and Matt," time is running out. In order for daughter to be free of McCallin, Claire needs to do something drastic and quick.

The powerful Mayor Jack McCallin is on a mission to silence the only person who can make his empire come tumbling down.

"A novel that pulls no punches. The gripping story line grabs you from page one and takes you on an epic ride through family secrets, political corruption and the bounds of a mother's love. It's Chinatown meets John Grisham with characters you'll welcome into your heart page after page. What a debut from this talented author!"
