Twelve of Wright's public/religious architectures, from the early Unity Temple (1905) to his posthumous Marin County Government Center (1957). Although small in number, his works other than houses exhibit a profuse vocabulary of architecture. Each of them is a distinctive presentation of his idea of "organic architecture", in terms of interest in structure/construction method, sense of scale, pursuit of forms, religious beliefs, and relation with nature. A volume summarizing Wright's thoughts on design.
