This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1895 Excerpt: ... FLY-FISHING CHAPTER XIII THROWING THE LINE AND FLIES--MAKING A CASTHUMOURING THE FLIES--HOW TO FISH A STREAM--HOW TO STRIKE, HOOK, PLAY, AND LAND A FISH. To become a good fly-fisher requires address, skill, nicety of touch, and, above all, practice. Experience alone can make the youthful angler proficient in the highest branch of the angler's art. He has to capture the swiftest of fish with the finest and frailest material, in the clearest streams. Other sports may be more exciting than artificial fly-fishing, but there are none which requires more adroitness, more intelligence, a quicker eye, or a lighter hand; while the brain must be quick to apprehend, the limbs active, and the eye watchful. You see the fly-fisher with his slender rod, gracefully waving his line over his head, and the flies drop into the stream with the lightness of a gossamer; the line does not even ripple the water. Anxiously the angler watches the artificial insects formed so cunningly to deceive the wary trout, which lies with his nose up-stream watching for his prey. Ere the young angler can realise all the delights of his pursuit, he will have much to learn, and it will be his fault if he does not profit by these instructions. He must remember, however, that all that a book can do is to point out the right road, and practice must do the rest. The first lesson which the novice has to learn is to throw the line. To do this properly requires no little address The rod should be light, stiffish rather than supple, and from ten to twelve feet long. His winch should be firmly secured to the butt, and he should draw out from three to four yards beyond the topmost ring. The rings must be in a right line with the winch, and the line should run easily through them. Some anglers fix the winch ...
